Customer Reviews

This book is stunning on two levels. First, as a collection beautiful photos of the highest quality that are also highly unusual, showing the artist's unique vision of both the global images and very small details. A reflection of light in a droplet of dew. A leaf, turned magical through the angle and the play of light and shadow. A snail watching its own reflection in the water. Rare views of rural and remote Russian landscapes. And -- one of my favorites -- the author's self-portrait, as a reflection in a Christmas ornament nesting in between the silvery fir branches. The play of color, texture, and form make each of these photos similar to a painting, each unforgettable in its own way. In addition to the photographs, each page also holds a short poem, some of them funny, some sad, some with a bit of both, masterfully conveying the depth that is so surprising in such a short expression form. The poems are written in Russian, but I strongly believe the book can be appreciated by anyone--as a collectible, a coffee table item, or simply a great conversation piece.
