Synopsis

Full Length, Drama / 11 m / Int. This volatile, incendiary drama premiered in 1976 under the direction of Mike Nichols, produced by Joseph Papp at New York's Lincoln Center. Revived in 2008 by the Roundabout Theatre, the third in author Rabe's quartet of "Vietnam Plays" is set in the Army barracks housing a group of young men, the "streamers" of the title: hapless parachutists who streak to certain death when their parachutes fail to open. This group includes Billy, a new recruit; Roger, a street-wise refugee from the ghetto; Richie, a sarcastic, bitter homosexual and their sodden, ineffectual sergeants, Cokes and Rooney. Awaiting deployment to Vietnam, they are joined by Carlyle, an angry, psychotic young black man, whose presence sets off an escalating spiral of violence and death. By the author of Sticks and Bones and HurlyBurly "Hard hitting and extremely funny. A masterly drama with humor, power and impressive depths of understanding."-New York Daily News

I was looking for a copy of In the Boom Boom Room for one of my students to use for a monologue assignment when I saw the 3 stars for Streamers. As I read the reviews I was struck by the adage "on the stage not on the page". I saw this on Broadway and have since seen it done at colleges throughout the country and it is as powerful a piece of theatre as you'll find especially depicting the inanities and the insanity of war. While perhaps not as good as Sticks and Bones and Pavlo Hummel it is still one of the best plays to come out of the Vietnam war and is in many ways this generation's What Price Glory....try to see it...not read it

The play is set in 1965. The single location is the barracks room where a few young Army soldiers live. The play has 2 acts and three scenes total. The characters talk about the possibility of going to Vietnam, which, sometimes sounds like an experience they want, and sometimes sounds like a death sentence (they discuss death by snake and falling into poisoned traps.) And, they bust each others chops, frequently making homosexual innuendos. There are 4 main characters - roommates Billy, Richie and Roger, and friend of the group Carlyle. They get into discussions like this a lot: Billy: Now! (pointing to Roger) Tell that man you mean what you're sayin' Richie. Richie: Mean what? Billie: That you think you're pretty. Richie: Of course I do; I am. Don't you think I am? Don't you think I am Roger? Pros - It's got a good feel for the time and place. There's tension in the characters wondering if they're going to be sent to Vietnam, and if so, what will happen to them there. There are a few great moments, e.g., when Sergeants Rooney and Coke come in drunk and talk about their time in the Airborne. They talk about parachutists they've known who's equipment failed them, i.e, streamers, and how they might have spent their last minutes. It was a chilling bit. Cons - It's unfocused and slow. It's largely three scenes of enlistees rambling and talking trash. Until the end, which has some action but is still confused. I didn't get the characters motivations. Richie kept teasing his roommates with gay innuendo, given that it's 1965 and they're in the Army, I couldn't see why. Summary - It had a couple of powerful moments but not enough to really draw me into it.

this book performed as it supposed to. it surprised me at accuracy of the type of story being told and did not disappoint in any way.
