Customer Reviews

Todd Fuller's work deserves slow reading, but to be honest? I gulped down my first go-through. Like water after drought, like champagne at a celebration, like the honey from sweet bees, his words offer both comfort & stimulation. Fuller's images resonate of the tall grass prairies of Oklahoma, the tribes with whom he works & lives. They sing with the rhythms of jazz, of chant, of heartbeats. The title poem -- noting that it is after the mourned poet Ai -- is both still & sere: "I am/ The bullet and flame/ That destroys silence"; "...I follow/ You on your powwow/ Highway and see your/ Bald tires." The unexpected is not random in Fuller's work: it surprises like the pirouette of a two-year-old in "A Cremation Story.." or the "ghost/ of Bear Bryant" in "Infrastructures." Whether you think you like poetry or not, you can't help but be drawn in to Fuller's book. Buy it, read it, and then read it again.
