Customer Reviews

They both see themselves as broken and undeserving, and each other as perfect. I can't remember their back stories and am dying to re-acquaint myself with them. Even though I've read this series three times or more, it's been a long time, and I've forgotten that intensity between them and the intricacies of the story line. We meet the Four and a half headstones when lead singer Drezden Halifax fires then smashes their lead guitarist for being smashed on stage. At a crucial part of their tour they're looking for a replacement, and Lola Cooper's brother, guitarist for supporting band, Barbed Wire, suggests she should audition. She does, she gets in, and she meets the musician that she has crushed on for years. Unbeknownst to her, he is affected by her now too. When Drezden focused his music and lyrics on Lola, she fumbled. When he intensified his gaze on her, she lost a sound. When he knew this and used it against her, Porter and Colt, the others in the band, doubted her ability. Drezden knew then, that he affected Lola, had the power to break her, and that it would sabotage the band if he did. He backed off, and their first practice went perfect. She and the boys were happy. Lola did, however, realise that the way Drezden performed at the end of that practice was different. It was like Drezden had hid himself behind a curtain. He still sounded the same. It was as if the emerald in his eyes had burned out (and it let me) play to my fullest. This is the intensity that Nora unleashes on us, her readers. Whatever you do, understand that you are going to get hot and bothered, so sit by an open window or hang onto a fan! BTW, I'm only 30% through the book.

I am a huge rock romance fan so when I had the chance to revisit a series that I had read a couple of years ago I jumped at it especially because I love this author. I have to say that it didn't matter that I had read it previously because I was still drawn in to this book hook line and sinker and my previous 5 star review still has not changed. It is about a hard driven rock star that has a past that he wants to stay hidden for some very good reasons. Being front man for Four and a Half Headstones is something that he worked hard for and put 110% in to. When his guitarist, Johnny Muse has been nothing but trouble by having to start shows later because Johnny can't be torn away from some pre-concert groupie activity or showing up to shows unable to play worth a crap because of being drunk, Drez has finally had enough and literally kicks Johnny from the band. That would all be fine and good but it just so happens that they are in the middle of a tour with a couple day break before the next city they hit for another concert. With all of the other bands who open for them there has to be someone who can fill in this spot. It isn't like Johnny was holding up his end of the group anyway. Lola Cooper is playing grunt for her brother's band and is scared to death when her brother Sean, tells her of the immediate opening in Drezâ™s band and has talked to Brenda who is Four and a Half Headstoneâ™s manager, and has gotten her a spot to try out for the guitarist position. Sean knows that Lola is damn good guitarist and has a really good shot at making it. Once Lola gets herself together she knocks the tryouts out of the park. It was easy for her since she has been a huge fan of the band for years.
